Nazi Victims Can Claim Assets Seized In U.S. Zone

The U.S. State and Army Departments announced that persons persecuted during the Nazis' reign could henceforth obtain restitution of property robbed from them in what is now the United States occupation zone of Germany.

Victims who can identify property taken under duress between Jan. 30, 1933, and May 8, 1945, may file claims under Military Government Law 59. This statute was promulgated by the two departments in conjunction with the United States Military Government.

The law applies to all transactions enforced as a result of discrimination based on race, religion, nationality, ideology or resistance to National Socialism.

In promulgating the law the United States took the lead in the face of the failure of the Allied Control Council to agree on a restitution solution. It was said that the U.S. had made considerable progress toward agreements with Britain and France for their zones. Some, but not much, progress in negotiations with Russia was also reported.

German officials opposed the restitution law in the drafting stage. It will have to be imposed by the Military Government, says the New York Times.

Officials explained that in general the immediate benefits of the measure would accrue to residents in Germany. They cautioned refugees in the U.S. to weigh claims carefully before spending dollars in prosecuting them when there are no dollars to take out of Germany. It was suggested, however, that persons with substantial claims would find it worth while to press them for collection when the Germany economy was stabilized.

Government spokesmen said Jewish refugees were the largest bloc involved and would have the largest number of absentee claims.

Relief organizations have estimated that of 500,000 German Jews involved, 300,000 are alive and of these only 15,000 are in Germany. They have also estimated that 20 per cent of all property seized from German Jews was in the American zone.

As officials in Washington explained the situation, a fundamental objection of German officials to the law is that it was a proposal for merely one zone. They felt that it should be enforced throughout Germany. They have raised other objections, however.

Russia was reported to be opposed to the claims of any persons not now resident in her zone.

The United States, it was said, first sought to get an all-Germany agreement. An effort was then made to get a common law for the American, British and French zones. When the negotiations lagged, it was decided that the United States should wait no longer to promulgate a law called for in the basic directive to the United States Military Governor, the first draft of which was begun in the fall of 1945.

A point of difference among the four Allied powers, it was said, is the principle, insisted on by the

Says DP Experts Could Enrich These Lands

An employer-union delegation designated by the Canadian Government to select 2,000 garment workers for immigration into Canada from displaced persons camps in Germany and Austria reported in New York on successful completion of its mission.

The report of the delegation, which returned from Europe on the Queen Mary, was presented at a special luncheon of the Jewish Labor Committee at the Park Central Hotel. Most of the fifty persons present were representatives of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL, and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO, both of which cooperated in selection of the Canadian committee.

The two unions have joined with employers in the men's and women's clothing industry in the U.S. in petitioning the Federal Government for permission to bring 20,000 garment workers into the United States to relieve an acute shortage of skilled labor in the needle trades. The petitions are currently under study by the Department of Justice.

The employers have guaranteed jobs for all those admitted and have promised that there will be no displacement of American workers as a result of the project.

Members of the Canadian delegation reported that there was a vast reservoir of talent to be drawn upon in the DP camps. They emphasized that Jewish and non-Jewish workers were equally in need of help. All groups were considered in the selection of the Canadian delegation. It was stated that it was unable to take the lead in promoting the immigration of DP's to meet its own need for more skilled tailors. He noted, however, that there were a million Jews and non-Jews awaiting aid and that the Canadian project represented only a small beginning in coping with the problem.

The tragic responsibility of having to decide which DP's would be allowed to go to Canada and which would have to be passed over was described by Bernard Shane of Montreal and Samuel Herbst of Winnipeg, both organizers for the

Palestine Jews To Collect Defense Fund

The executive committee of Vaad Leumi, Palestine's Jewish National Council, voted at a meeting to conduct a drive to raise new funds for defense among all sections of the Jewish community. The goal is the collection of £500,000 ($2,000,000) in voluntary contributions before Dec. 31.

David Remez, the chairman, said "security" was the main problem and preoccupation of the entire Jewish community. It includes not only protection against a possible offensive by the Arab world but also defense against the activities of more violent elements of the Jewish community.

Labor representatives brought out the latter phase of the question in a general discussion that followed the formal speeches. One declared that the community's real danger was that from the terrorists. He said they must be answered with force.

The goal of $2,000,000 represents an average of $3 a person for the Jews of Palestine. Personal contribution, it is hoped, will raise about 30 per cent. The rest is to be contributed by Jewish organizations of all types.

Mr. Remez expressed optimism about the plan to partition Palestine into Arab and Jewish states as a result of the "practically miraculous" United States-Soviet agreement on the proposal. He criticized the British for standing apart from the current proceedings on partition in the United Nations meetings.

Gershon Agronsky, Jerusalem newspaper editor who recently returned from Lake Success, testified

British Begin Evacuation, Will Not Help Partition

Withdrawal of the British Army and of military stores from Palestine, which is to end in complete evacuation, has begun. It is being made by sea from Haifa and by land across the Egyptian border to Port Said and it may last up to a year.

It will be five months before the withdrawal reaches full momentum but the Army estimates that the present timetable, dictated by the haste of recent political events, will result in the leaving behind of more than half the present supplies, totalling 210,000 tons. Instructions are that nothing of military value may be left and the material that, it seems, will be lost by Britain consists largely of camp equipment and installations, vehicles and engineering equipment.

Great Britain told the United Nations' harassed planners of Palestine partition on November 13 that all her troops will quit the Holy Land by next Aug. 1, but that, before their departure, they will absolutely not be used in any way to enforce a partition.

Furthermore, Britain warned that she reserves the right to terminate both the Palestine mandate and the British civil administration in the Holy Land at any time, once the U.N. has produced an alleged solution that is not acceptable to both Arabs and Jews—in short, partition.

From the time that such termination should occur, Britain held the U.N., any remaining British troops in Palestine would be responsible for law and order only in that part of the country in which they happened to be stationed.

This statement before the partition subcommittee of the General Assembly's special Palestine committee was a douse of cold water poured over the new joint Russian-American agreement which called for the British to keep law and order in all Palestine until next May 1, at which time (or soon after) the proposed Jewish and Arab states would emerge sover-

U. N. Urges Return Home Of Refugees

A United Nations committee reached a decision on one of its oldest and most controversial questions: the fate of refugees and displaced persons.

By a vote of 38 to 1, with the Slav states among the twelve abstaining, the General Assembly Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee approved a redrafted compromise resolution urging members to speed the return home of all repatriable refugees and to open their doors to a "fair share of non-repatriable displaced persons."

The committee, winding up its work, also approved a last-minute British amendment, which was understood to be aimed in part at halting "illegal" immigration to Palestine.

The British amendment restricted a broadly worded clause in the original resolution, which asked governments not to assist organizations encouraging immigration that was likely "to disturb friendly relations between nations."

Dr. Enrique V. Corominas of Argentina cast the single vote against the measure. He contended that it would accomplish nothing further in aiding refugees and that the topic was sufficiently covered by the Charter of the International Refugee Organization.

Austria Wants DP From U.S. Zone

The pressure of Europe's migrating Jewry to enter the American occupation zone of Germany continues unabated, reports the New York Herald Tribune. It was learned that the Austrian government has requested from European Command Headquarters entry permits for about 20,000 Romanian and Central European Jews temporarily residing in that country.

The American occupation zone is now host to about 140,000 Polish and Ukrainian Jews, who are classed as displaced persons although about 80 per cent of them entered Germany after the surrender. In addition, an estimated 10,000 to 15,000 German Jews who survived the Nazi pogroms are still there.

Various explanations are offered by headquarters experts, as well as by spokesmen for the International Refugee Organization and Jewish groups, for the Jewish migration to the American zone.

One is that Rumanians and Hungarian Jews, who number about 350,000, fear that the Communist regimes in their countries may strike a heavy blow at Jewish business men.

Another is fear of anti-Semitic outbreaks. The Office of the Adviser on Jewish Affairs has specifically mentioned this as a compelling reason for clearing out of the Balkans, as it was in Poland.

A third reason is the desire to migrate to Palestine.

An appeal to the United Nations to open the way to Palestine for Jews in the American zone was voiced in a resolution passed at a meeting at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, of representatives of all Jewish D.P.s in the zone.

At the conclusion of the short but emotional meeting, attended by officials of the United States Ar-

Weizmann Party To Aid Institute

Serge Koussevitsky and the 107-man Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to New York to play a full concert at a birthday party for Dr. Chaim Weizmann at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, on Tuesday night, November 25.

Dr. Weizmann, the world's most famous Zionist and one of its best-known scientists, will be seventy-three on the following Thursday, Thanksgiving Day.

The American Committee of the Weizmann Institute of Science in Rehovoth, Palestine, in announcing the plans, said that 2,000 persons are expected to pay $250 each to attend the party, which will also mark the completion of the physics and chemistry building at the Institute. The committee expects to gross $500,000 from the party, net proceeds of which will go to the Institute. Among the sponsors is

ILGWU. Mr. Herbst told of one craftsman who had to be rejected and who asked that his thimble be taken to Canada if he could not go.

"There are hundreds of thousands of expert mechanics rotting away in DP camps who could be used to enrich our countries," Mr. Shane declared. "We hope the world will open up its heart to these people for its own sake as well as for theirs."

Adolph Held, chairman of the Jewish Labor Committee, presided at the luncheon. He expressed hope that the United States would emulate Canada's example in authorizing immigration of DP garment workers.

The American Federation for Polish Jews called on Congress to enact the Stratton bill or similar legislation liberalizing immigration laws as part of the European recovery program. The 250 delegates convening also requested President Truman to instruct the American delegation to the United Nations "to actively support the principles enunciated in the majority report of the United Nations' special committee on Palestine." The federation created a committee to aid Polish Jews to recover assets taken from them in World War II. The group also pledged itself to raise $500,000 to establish in Palestine a colony for Polish Jews.

A SHORT WAIT

By John Hersey

By Permission Copyright 1947 The New Yorker Magazine, Inc.

After Luba got through customs, she carried her own suitcase down the stairs of Pier 56 and out onto the crowded sidewalk, and waited her turn for a taxi. She had written Aunt Hedy not to meet her, but she was disappointed, just the same, that neither Aunt Hedy nor Uncle David had come. When Luba finally managed to board a cab, she pronounced for the driver the words she had rehearsed several times: "Park Avenue, five hundred and sixty-one." The driver started up his taxi without hesitation, and Luba was pleased, for it was one thing to affect English in Prague and another to be able to have it understood in New York.

The driver, evidently surprised that she had no trunk, asked if she had come all the way across the ocean with only one suitcase. Luba just nodded and, intent on limiting the encounter to terms she had anticipated, repeated Aunt Hedy's address.

On the way across town, Luba looked at the city's building fronts and mid-afternoon faces, not altogether believing what she saw. When the cab arrived at the Park Avenue apartment, she paid the driver and stepped out of the taxi. She turned and lifted out the heavy bag. A doorman bent over to take it from her, but she drew back, shifted it to the hand away from the man in uniform, and said, "I will take it." The doorman opened the heavy glass door and she went in.

How often Luba had tried to imagine Aunt Hedy coming into this foyer, just barely nodding to the service! She remembered that nod from Prague, and the grand way Aunt Hedy used to walk into the Hotel Esplanade there. Luba had never dared to imagine what was upstairs in this New York apartment house; she had pictured Aunt Hedy only as far as the elevator. Now she herself was stepping toward the elevator as if it were a perfectly natural thing to do. The foyer seemed smaller than she had pictured it, and she never could have thought of a clock like the one set into the mirror on the right-hand wall—a clock with a blue glass face and green glass hands. She pressed the elevator button.

In the elevator, Luba thought of the rainy day in Poland when she and her brother Benjamin, Mrs. Mal, and Dr. Mazur had gathered in Dr. Mazur's bare room to draft a letter to Aunt Hedy and Uncle David. Luba's father and mother had been dead several months then. She could still recite the letter the little committee had written out: "I and a few friends who have been brought here to the Lodz ghetto from Prague wonder if you can imagine . . ." When the letter was sealed and addressed to her aunt and uncle in New York, she had given it to one of the more friendly Poles on the brick detail at the railway station, where she had been working at that time. Now she realized she had had no hope whatsoever, that day, that the letter would get to America. But she recalled the resentment she and the others had felt later because there was no answer. Before the war, Uncle David had been known in Prague as a philanthropist. The Svobodné Noviny had often mentioned Mr. David Lazrus, the eminent benefactor of this and that enterprise. He had gone to America just after the Germans moved into the Sudetenland. He was doubtless already known as a generous man in New York. He remained there after the war—until after his fortive flight on foot, guided by the Haganah, from Lodz to Machod, on the Czech border; the train trip across Czechoslovakia with hundreds of other Jewish refugees; the pause for examinations and allocations at the Rothschild Center in Vienna; transshipment into the American zone in Germany; and after the seven astounding months in the Landsberg D. P. camp. There she had applied through the Joint Distribution Committee representative for help from her uncle, and at last a more document had come, stating that Mr. David Lazrus would sponsor her journey to the United States. The J.D.C. made the arrangements to get her to England. The long letter from Aunt Hedy that had been waiting for her in London had made no mention of the painful appeal from the Lodz ghetto. Could it have arrived, Luba wondered as she stepped from the elevator into a small entry and rang the only doorbell.

Quite soon, the door opened. Luba said, "I am Luba." Then, realizing that it was not Aunt Hedy but a completely strange white-haired woman in a black dress and a white apron — a maid, thank heaven! — who had come to let her in, she said, "I am Luba Steiner."

The maid seemed to be expecting her. "Oh, do come in, please," she said. Her voice was kindly, but her pale, broad face and hairy upper lip gave her a rather forbidding look.

Luba walked into a hallway, a

To Restore Synagogue As Center

A national program for intensifying Jewish adherence to Judaism and for advancing public understanding of the Jewish faith and culture among all Americans was drafted at Chicago, Ill., by 167 delegates from every part of the U.S. who attended a conference on "fostering a dynamic Judaism in America," sponsored by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America.

Maxwell Abbell, Chicago business and philanthropic leader, was chosen unanimously to direct the program and to head a nation-wide campaign for the $1,750,000 required to maintain the educational activities of the seminary, the United Synagogue of America and the Rabbinical Assembly of America.

1. Meeting the impending need for adequately trained Jewish religious, educational and communal leadership through the enlarged schools of the seminary.

2. Enriching Jewish life by restoring the synagogue as the spiritual, cultural and social center of the Jewish community.

3. Advancing the Jewish education of children and adults by aiding communities in achieving higher standards and increased enrollment.

4. Fostering American understanding of Jews and Judaism through the seminary's comprehensive program of public education. Major features of this program include the "Eternal Light" radio broadcasts, the Institute for Religious and Social Studies, the Jewish Museum in New York, which houses the world's foremost collection of Jewish art and ceremonial objects, and the seminary library, the most extensive Jewish library in existence.

dazzling box of mirror and gilt and blue and light bulbs and glass pendants. She stood on a springy carpet holding her suitcase.

The maid said, "Mr. and Mrs. Lazrus telephoned a few minutes ago from LaGuardia Field. Their plane was delayed. They've been in Washington this week, but they were coming back to meet you. They're very sorry to be late. I'm to give you tea. I'm Mary. If you will make yourself at home in there . . ." The maid indicated a large living room. Then she said, "Perhaps you would like to wash?"

Luba said, "No, thank you."

"May I take your coat?"

"I will keep it, thank you."

The maid said, "Thank you, Miss," and walked away. As she opened a door to go out at the opposite end of the hall, she turned and said in a more friendly voice, "I hope Miss Steiner had a good crossing."

Luba said, "Thank you." Without taking off her coat, and still carrying the suitcase, she went into the living room. She was surprised to feel so unexcited. Her memory skipped past the ghetto for a moment to her own family's house, on Smetanova Ulice, in Prague. The living room there, she decided quite coldly, had been better than this. Her mother had always had better taste than Aunt Hedy. All the things here were very good, naturally — very expensive and good. But they were so new, they were set against so much bleached wood, and there were so many leather-bound books, obviously bought by a decorator rather than by a reader; at any rate, the room was ostentatious, Luba decided.

She put her suitcase down and sat on the very edge of the sofa, with her overcoat still drawn around her. So they were not here, after all this time! After her years of waiting, they still made her wait a few minutes longer. Waiting had seemed the worst thing in Lodz. Luba remembered the time her brother Benjamin had burst out in one of his self-dramatizing, childish furies and had said, "Let me be sent to Oswiecim. I'd rather dig my own grave than go through any more of this. Or at least let us get an answer from Uncle David, or hear better news, or something. I can't wait any longer for a decision."

On the mirrored coffee table before her, Luba saw a spode bowl full of chocolate kisses. With an urgency that had become a kind of reflex—by now she had overeaten so much that she was fatter than she had been before the war—she reached for a piece of candy and ate it. She noticed that her suitcase, even though quite new, seemed shabby against the carpet, which was beige and spotless. She stood up and took the bag out into the hall, where she put it next to a love seat. It the mirror that covered one wall of the foyer, she considered her overcoat, with its lapin collar. The coat had seemed so gay, [illegible] But now the brightness of the living room, and perhaps being kept waiting these extra minutes, had given her a new perspective—or, rather, had restored in her a very old one. She unbuttoned the coat and spread it open, and was dismayed that the dress underneath seemed just as cheap. Then she remembered that she did not want to look to Aunt Hedy as if she expected to stay here—where else could she go?—and she buttoned the coat again and went back into the living room.

Crossing the room, she saw, on a table, a photograph of her brother Benjamin in a ski suit, at Davos. She walked on deliberately and sat down again on the sofa.

For some reason, Benni's death itself was no longer vivid to her. One of the things that she remembered clearly, though, was the day, two weeks before he died, when he had been summoned to the S.S. office for something or other. Because he was so weak, she had gone along to support him, and it had taken them twenty minutes to get to the other side of Hohensteinerstrasse, the street for Germans and Poles bisecting the ghetto, over which the Nazis had built a wooden footbridge, so that no Jewish feet would defile the Aryan thoroughfare. She and Benni had sat down on every second or third step of the bridge, and Benni had talked about Walter Pater. He was reading "Marius the Epicurean" then.

She also remembered the night, several weeks earlier, when Benni suddenly put his face against her neck and said, "Ah, sister, you smell so sweet." She was wearing the perfume of bread; she had recently been shifted to work in the Germans' bakery. At the time, she and Benni and all the others were allotted only two hundred and fifty grams of bread a day—a small loaf every eight days. Everyone in the ghetto had his distinctive smell. Dr. Mazur was working on the "honey carts"; he had been the best heart specialist in Prague, but now he leaned his shoulder all day against a wagon loaded with slops. Still, it was worse, in some ways, to smell of bread.

Most vividly of all, Luba recalled the look on Benni's face in the candlelight during the secret service in Mrs. Mal's room on the Day of Atonement that year. By then, they all knew that Benni was going to die. Dr. Mazur recited the prayers in his deep, tinny Hebrew, and during Unsaneh Tokef Luba thought about Benni—especially in the part about the decree being sealed: "'Who shall live and who shall die, who at the measure of man's day and who before it; who shall perish by fire and who by water, who by the sword, who by wild beasts, who by hunger and who by thirst; who by earthquake and who by plague; who by strangling and who by stoning; who shall have rest and who go wandering, who shall be tranquil and who be harassed, who shall be at ease and who shall be afflicted . . .'"

When the maid brought in a tea tray, Luba was still sitting on the edge of the sofa with her overcoat on, leaning forward, her face in her hands.

"Your tea, Miss," the maid said. As she set the tray on the coffee table, Luba looked up.

"Aren't you warm in your overcoat, Miss?"

"No, thank you," Luba said.

"I made some cinnamon toast."

"Wonderful. I thank you."

"Do you like cream or lemon?"

"It makes no difference." Luba hesitated. "Cream, then."

"Of course. I've been with Mr. and Mrs. Lazrus for twelve years. Mrs. Lazrus tells me everything."

"She tells you everything?"

"Pretty near. I know all about the arrangements Mr. Lazrus had to make to get you over here."

"You are Jewish also?"

"Gracious, no! But I've been here for twelve years. I'm almost one of the family, with Mr. and Mrs. Lazrus."

Luba's round face flushed. "My aunt tells you everything?" She waited a moment and then added, "Did she ever mention receiving a letter from us in Lodz? Did you ever hear her speak about such a letter?"

"I couldn't say about that, Miss," the maid said tentatively.

"Three years ago? Nearly four?"

"I don't think so. I'm quite sure, because they kept saying it was too bad not to know anything about you. No, I'm positive there couldn't have been any mail. We only knew you were alive when the people here told us you were in Germany in that camp."

For the first time, Luba leaned back on the sofa. She closed her eyes and felt immensely relieved and at home. After a few seconds, she opened her eyes and said, "It is rather hot in here." She stood up, took off her coat, and handed it to the maid, who carried it out into the hall. While the maid was hanging the coat up in a closet, Luba heard the rattle of the elevator door and then, immediately afterward, the sound of a key being inserted in a lock. Luba walked toward the door as her Uncle David opened it.

STUFFED CABBAGE

one large head of cabbage
two pounds minced steak
two eggs
juice of one-half lemon sugar (about one teaspoon) one small grated onion
two pounds of raw brisket or flank salt and pepper
two large sliced onions

Scald the whole head of cabbage and separate the leaves, removing the centre and core, without breaking the leaves. Place the minced steak in a wooden bowl, add the eggs well-beaten, the small grated onion and salt and pepper to taste. Chop for a few minutes. Then add the lemon juice mixed with about one teaspoon of sugar (more lemon and sugar may be used, if desired) diluting this with a small amount of water. Continue chopping for a few minutes. Place a small amount of the meat in the centre of each cabbage leaf and roll it up, closing the ends. In the meantime, put the brisket or flank meat in a large cooking-pot with two large sliced onions, salt and pepper, adding a small amount of water. Let this boil for a little while, during which time the meat and rolls are being prepared. Place the cabbage rolls over this meat and add two cans of tomato juice. Let the meat, cabbage rolls and tomato juice boil slowly for about an hour and a half, then add sugar to taste, approximately one-half cup, and boil slowly for an additional hour. Then add thickening, two tablespoons of flour (more if desired) dissolved in about one-half cup of cold water. Let boil for at least another half-hour.

BRITISH BEGIN

sign and independent and on their own, reports the New York Herald Tribune.

Immediately after Sir Alexander Cadogan had delivered the British statement, Russia, the United States, Canada and Guatemala returned soberly to their labors as a four-country working group trying to plan partition enforcement, and whatever new formula they might devise, they had to hope, and hope hard, that Britain would conduct herself to make partition as easy as possible in Palestine.

Sir Alexander, in answer to questions put to him by Dr. Jorge Garcia Granados, of Guatemala, pledged Britain to take no action "contrary" to a U.N. recommendation on partition and to refrain from actions that would "obstruct" partition.

But, apart from this, Sir Alexander reserved the British right to take certain actions which, depending upon how they were timed and planned, could help to bring about as smooth as possible a partition, or could plunge Palestine into utter chaos.

The best for partition that could happen within the framework of the British reservations would be this: Britain could abandon her Palestine mandate and civil administration in Palestine until its surrender could dovetail in harmony with the U. N. efforts to finalize partition.

At the same time, while beginning troop withdrawals, Britain could keep forces longest in those areas most likely to be scenes of trouble, and could finally withdraw from them in such [illegible] to permit organized [illegible] the framework of the British reservations would be this: Britain could abandon her Palestine mandate and civil administration five minutes after the U.N. voted partition, thus cutting the legs out from under most of normal organized Palestine life and leaving the area without a recognized government.

At the same time, Britain could withdraw her troops from all areas of possible trouble and leave it up to Arabs and Jews to battle out the issue in the event the Arabs oppose partition with armed force.

All in all, the British statement was regarded by a number of delegates as "painfully helpful" in that it disabused the partition planners in their aspirations to use British activity as an enforcer of the political split in the Holy Land. It now becomes plain beyond doubt that any help the British give to partition enforcement will be purely incidental.

United States, that a presumption of duress should run in favor of persecuted classes.

Under the law, the Military Governor will designate the successor organizations for heirless property. Provisions of the law and of an accompanying regulation follow:

1. The property must be in the United States zone, including the state of Bremen. Claims for property in the American sector of Berlin will not be received until further legislation is adopted.

2. Claims arising from war damage and injury not connected with the wrongful taking of identifiable property are not covered by the law. Future legislation will provide for such claims.

3. Claims should be filed as prescribed in Regulation 1 and should be mailed directly to Zentralanmeldeamt (central filing agency), Bad Nauheim, Germany.

4. Claimants not resident in Germany should nominate in their claim a person within Germany to serve as their agent and to receive all papers and notices issued under the law. All claims must be filed on or before Dec. 31, 1948.

5. Administration of the law will be the responsibility of German officials, the Military Government supervising and reviewing any decision of the German tribunals.

6. If a claim is disputed, it will be adjudicated by the restitution chamber, a branch of the ordinary German courts (Landeright). The restitution courts will consist of a judge and two other persons legally qualified to be judges; one of the three must belong to a class of persons persecuted by the Nazis. Appeals will be taken to the German Appeals Court (Oberlandesgericht).

7. Claims should be filed, if possible, in the German language.

8. Restitution will be made in kind, if possible: dollars for dollars, pounds for pounds, francs for francs, etc. But the property of absentee owners will remain blocked and may be removed only as prescribed by Military Government regulations. Claims settled in marks may not be remitted outside Germany, nor may a conversion to another currency be made, until foreign exchange is generally available for such purposes.

9. Printed forms are not necessary in filing claims, and only true copies or photocopies of documents should be sent. Pictures or drawings of property should be sent if necessary.

10. Outline of information desired in a claim for restitution: information about the claimant and his agent, or about a persecuted person involved in a claim; information concerning property, including real property, business enterprises, securities, personal property; statement of facts concerning the act of confiscation, including data about the property before confiscation; information about the person who received the property and all other parties to the proceeding; finally, a prayer for relief, including whether the claimant is willing to take, instead of his property, the difference between the amount allowed him under duress and a fair purchase price.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Brostman, 219 Richview Avenue, announce the bar-mitzvah of their son, Irving, to take place on December 14, at Men of England Synagogue.

WEIZMANN

Dr. Albert Einstein.

The Boston Symphony, according to its manager, George Judd, is playing the concert as a benefit performance and will receive only its travelling expenses. The second half of the concert, from 9.30 to 10.30 p.m., will be broadcast as the regular Boston Symphony program from the stage of the Waldorf's Grand Ballroom over WJZ and the American Broadcasting Company network, Mr. Judd said.

He added that the Boston Symphony regularly plays two or three benefits a year. When the institute committee approached them on the matter, he said, "Everybody wanted to do it."

Guests at the party will hear only one address—from Dr. Weismann. Before the concert at 8.45 p.m., Abraham Feinberg, chairman of the Reception Committee of 100, will make a brief introductory statement. The concert will open with "The Star-Spangled Banner", and a special orchestration of "Hatikvah," the Zionist national anthem, by Kurt Weill.

Mr. Judd said that the concert program was not completed yet, but that he thought the first half would be all Mendelssohn, and the broadcast portion all Beethoven.

After the concert, Henry Morgenthau Jr., former Secretary of the Treasury, will introduce Dr. Weismann. Following his talk, a buffet supper will be served.

Among other patrons of the dinner are former Governor Herbert H. Lehman, William S. Paley, chairman of the board of the Columbia Broadcasting System, and Mr. Morgenthau. Edmund I. Kaufmann is chairman of the American Committee of the Weismann Institute.

Commentaries

By Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi

A Rabbi's Response

(From address given at the banquet tendered Dr. Stern by Congregation Emanu-El on the occasion of his twentieth anniversary as leader of the congregation.)

I arise to address you tonight with especial gratitude to God for the score of years which has been my privilege to minister at Emanu-El and through Emanu-El to have had the privilege of serving fellow man.

Elated as I am with the tributes paid me by so distinguished representatives of religion, judiciary, education and government, I know full well as in the legendary advice of which King David is supposed to have given Solomon as to the secret of longevity "That this, too, will pass." I therefore must keep the balance though my cup overfloweth this evening with happiness, indeed. I am grateful.

Mine has not been an easy ministry but rather a battling ministry. I have ever refused to be a chaplain to the rich and a time-server. Thus, I have maintained that within the precincts of the synagogue, at least, rich and poor are alike and here spiritual equality must prevail.

I can pay no greater compliment to Emanu-El than to say at the end of a score of years of teaching and preaching that, in the main direction of my leading, you walked with me and wherever you hesitated to follow you tried to understand, but above all you ever respected the leadership of your rabbi.

I have tried in my larger ministry in a spiritual sense to be a road-builder and a bridge-builder. You know how bridge and road-builders were, indeed, admired by the ancient Romans, as told to us by the immortal Lowell.

I rejoice that there are differences among us as to observances and faiths. That makes the world interesting and charming. Differences in faith do not worry me at all. Rather is it "indifference" to faith and faiths which disturb me.

Thus beyond the Temple walls I have searched out my brethren in the Orthodox and Conservative groupings. "Catholic" Israel has ever been my [illegible]

And, of course, beyond my people I rejoice in the building of bridges between Jew and non-Jew. I am thankful to God for the friendships I have known within and without the Jewish community. Never has Jew and Christian stood closer together as in our time. For when Hitler burned down synagogues he logically followed by desecrating and setting fire to church. Spiritually speaking, Christians are Jews. And there is no hope for civilization unless the Judaeo-Christian conception of life is followed and implemented. Therein only lies the hope for mankind.

During the past ten years I have had the comfort and support here in my ministry of a devoted helpmate. You know the ministry is the only calling where two work and only one is paid! The best tribute I can pay my helpmate is the one I pronounce on Sabbath eve following the blessing of the Sabbath lights and prior to the Kiddush amidst our Sabbath family reunion, as is the classic Jewish practice:

"A woman of valor who can find?
For her price is far above rubies.
She looketh well to the ways of her household,
And eateth not the bread of idleness.
Her children rise up, and call her blessed;
Her husband also, and he praiseth her:
'Many daughters have done valiantly
But thou excellest them all.'
Grace is deceitful and beauty is vain;
But a woman that feareth, the Lord,
She shall be praised." (Proverbs 31)

I am happy for my achievements which have proven acceptable. I regret, however, that because of human limitations, I have done some things inadequately. For these inadequacies I pray God's forgiveness and man's forgiveness.

Happily my ministry has centered in the pleasant and free lands of United States and Canada. Here, in this blessed Dominion, we are dwelling in a land youthful and vigorous and resilient, a land free from the prejudices and the decadence which overburden and harass the peoples on the European continent. Here in the lands of the West man has another chance to build God's kingdom on earth and is giving to civilization a new hope and direction.

Thank you all who have come here to share in this evening's celebration. Gratitude I extend in particular to all who have organized this festive event in recognition of my labors in your midst. I love my work as I truly love people. May God continue to bless our fellowship. I pray to Him that He grant me the strength to continue my labors for Emanu-El, Israel and mankind. I find rest in my God even as I am restless in the cause of God. May God bless you all.

PALESTINE JEWS

As the possibility of an independent state grows the Jews continue to disclaim any wish to use force except for defense. Mr. Remez declared that the line of Zionism and of the Jewish community in Palestine as a whole was one of peace, brotherhood, unity, progress and compromise. The spirit of compromise was shown, he said, in Jews' willingness to negotiate on a basis of partition.

A problem that remains for the future state to settle is the control of elements that do not accept the authority of Vaad Leumi. The barbed-wire barricades, armored cars and sentries in Jerusalem and elsewhere are constant reminders that not all elements of the community abide by the peaceful policies of the Jewish Agency for Palestine and of Vaad Leumi.

Vaad Leumi called for the immediate mobilization of all Jewish manpower in Palestine in readiness for an "emergency hour," expected to arise with the setting up of a separate Jewish state.

The council outlined short and long-term plans for essential services to be implemented when the Jewish state came into being.

A novel method decided on by the council for raising money was a "house curfew" while thousands of collectors made the rounds of their homes. "By this means we hope nobody will escape the net," a Jewish Agency spokesman said.

AUSTRIA WANTS

my, the International Refugee Organization and various Jewish groups, a resolution was addressed to the United Nations General Assembly in which the aspirations and expectations of the displaced persons were summed up with the words "to be or not to be."

The resolution was accepted by Judge Louis Levinthal of Philadelphia, former president of the Zionist Organization of America, who is adviser on Jewish affairs to General Lucius D. Clay, the United States Military Governor. Judge Levinthal was requested to give the resolution to "our good friend, General Clay" for official transmittal to the United Nations.

"We know that our fate today is being decided by the United Nations," the resolution declared. "At such a moment we stand before you with only one prayer on our lips: the whole tribulation and pain of the bleeding survivors of European Jewry lie on the scales before you, the highest tribunal of nations.

"It should not for one moment be forgotten that we have lost everything except the hope of Palestine. . . . After seven years of inhuman torture in the death camps we enter the third winter on German soil. And the cry to you is torn from us with a question: How long? . . . let us go as a free people in our own home."

From a sketch by W. E. Logan—1845

Over a century ago William Edmond Logan discovered much of our Dominion's mineral resources. Pioneering as Chief of the Geological Survey of Canada, Logan's explorations hastened the development of today's great mining industry. Sir William Logan's eminence as geologist, miner and metallurgist won him international fame as the father of Canadian science.

In 1845 LOGAN said:
"It Will Become a Great Country"

In 1622 CALVERT said:
"The Land Will Yield Many Things"

Far back in the 17th Century, Calvert foresaw the development of the New World. "My resolution is to build," he wrote: "The commencement of industry is near."

Famed English statesman and Secretary of State to King James I, Calvert founded historic colonies in the early 1600's. "Encourage the building of this country," he urged his settlers: "Be partners . . . preserve unity and good government."

Man of Vision 300 years ago, Calvert's ideals of unity have been shared by all men of vision through the generations since Calvert's time.

The full measure of our stature as a nation depends upon unity of purpose. There is only one Canada for clear-headed Canadians.
